

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Robert Bivona has a degree in physics, did graduate work in physics and engineering, and has decades of professional experience in physics, math and engineering. He applied his analytic skills to his lifelong interest in public policy because our nation urgently needs fresh policy solution ideas from outside professional political and economics orthodoxy. Our political problems and resulting economic problems—largely caused by current political and economic professionals—are resulting in great injustices and unnecessary hardships for tens of millions of our fellow citizens, and are an existential threat to our nation.
